Mr. Meese said after Monday morning's session that the U.S. policy was largely supported by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Italian Premier Ginvanni Spadolini and European Commission President Gaston Thorn.

Mr. Reagan, anticipating a chorus of European complaints about interest rates, tried to mollify the concern by blaming the high rates on his predecessor. Jimmy Carter, and saying it was not deliberate U.S. policy to continue them.

Israel Continues to Pound Guerrilla Bases in Lebanon

By David B. Ottaway
Wisirangton Past Service
BEIRUT — Israel launched ground, air and sea anacks on southern Lebanon Monday, continuing for the 11th consecutive day its assault on Palestinian strongholds there in defiance of a U.S. effort to arrange a cease-fire in the worst surge of fighting here in three years.

The first Israeli attack of the day came shortly after midnight when helicopter-horne commandos stormed a guerrilla stronghold on the Zahrani River, about 27 miles south of Beirut, under the cover of fire from Israeli gunbous.

The Palestinian news agency WAFA said the assault on the stronghold was repelled, as was an Israeli attempt to land commandos by sea. The agency said that one Israeli gunboat was set on fire. But the Israeli military command de-nied there was any such effort to put commandos ashore.

The Israelis did acknowledge the death of one officer, a major, and the wounding of seven soldiers in the half-hour attack. This was re-garded here as a fairly high casualty toll for a small Israeli operation. suggesting as the Palestinians said that it bad run into still resistance.

Commando Action

Local sources in Sidon just to the north of the Zahrani River, said the Israeli commandos had blown up ammunition and weapons depots at Fannar and Mseilch. Two and a half miles inland they also attacked three other strongholds belonging to Yasser Arafat's el-Fatah organization, the largest within the PLO umbrella, in the same general area, they said.

Reporters visiting the area Monday where surprised at the extent of the damage. Israeli bombs not only had destroyed a key bridge across the Zahrani but also a number of huildings and installations around the 30-year-old refinery. Nearly a dozen oil-delivery trucks also had been gutted.

The entire country from Beirut south is now in the grips of an acute gasoline sbortage, and there are long lines at every station that is still open.

Despite the Israeli destruction of several key bridges and attempts to cut the road by bomb-ings, the main coastal highway remains open all the way from the capital to Tyre. The Lebanese and Palestinians have quickly built bypasses and bave repaired the road-way to enable cars and trucks to continue using it.

There was little sign of Palestinian guerrillas anywhere along the highway Monday. Reporters encountered not a single roadcheck until they approached the Litani River just north of Tyre. There, guerrillas were halting all traffic because Israeli artillery was shelling a hadly damaged hridge across the Litani as well as a makeshift

Arafat Vows to Keep Fighting As Arab Nations Rally to PLO

BEIRUT - Yasser Arafat, the Palestinian guerrilla leader, vowed Monday to fight back against the barbarian, unhumanitarian war he said had been launched by Israd, as Arah nations rallied to aid

"We have nothing to lose," Mr. Arafat told reporters in a heavily guarded hasement only two blocks from the densely populated area of west Beirut devastated Friday by an Israeli bombing raid.

Saudi Arabia announced Monday that it would pay $20 million to the PLO and an additional $20 million to Lebanon to belp cover the damage caused by the Israeli air attacks.

Libya, which has provided the guerrillas and Lebanese leftists with considerable quantities of sephisticated heavy weapons in recent months, also announced that it would replace any weapons that were destroyed in the raids.

Compensation Offered

The official Libyan news agency reported from Tripoli that Libya had offered to compensate the Palestinians and their Lebanese leftist allies for all losses suffered as a result of the Israeli raids. Oatar and the United Arab Emirates promised medical aid. and Bahrain donated $100,000 to the Palestinians, the PLO reported.

Newspaper editorials and goverument officials throughout the Arab world denounced the Israeli attacks. Most linked the increase in military action to the United States, and a number of them, including Libyan leader Col. Moamer Qadhafi, called for cutting back on oil exports to the United States.

Ali Shaer, the Saudi Arabian ambassador, met with Lebanese President Elias Sarkis and said afterward that his country was urging the United States to pressure Israel to stop the raids.

Saudi Arabia is doing all it can to put pressure on the United States to restrain Israel and to stop the air raids on the south of Lehanon," said Mr. Shaer, who has sought to ease the tension in Lebanon between Syrian troops and rightist Christian militiamen.

This concern has led to a closer look at defense, including a series of briefings arranged for Director David A. Stockman of the Office of Management and Budget, who wants to learn more about defense spending.

Mr. Stockman is pondering proposals for closing as many as 200 military bases as a quick way to save money. The 5 percent military cuts negotiated by the Office Management and Budget would another, adding up to rough

The Reagan administration has said nothing in public about re-straining defense spending; its rhetoric all leans in the opposite direcnon. But behind the public facade of unanimous support for a huge defease huildup, the administration is increasingly divided.

"Three or four months ago," an Reagan administration official said, "there was a feeling around here that we could afford the luxury of not scrutinizing defense as osely as we looked at other kinds of spending. That feeling is no longer operative."

Moreover, it is understood at the White House, according to a senior official, that if the administration's economic projections for 1983 and 1984 prove to be optimistic, defense spending will have to be cut to help meet the politically important target of a balanced budget in 1984.

If this is understood at the White House, bowever, it is not understood in the Pentagon or on Capitol Hill, where plans for a steady expansion of defense spending at a rate of at least 7 percent a year after inflation are oow mendation that the rate of increase go up to 9 percent a year. Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger brought that recom-mendation to a top-level White House meeting last month, according to informed sources. But after making a formal presentation on the possible need to go up to 9 percent, Mr. Weinberger added per-sonally that he would invoke his reputed talents as a budget-cutter to meet the 7 percent target.

According to authoritative sources, Martin Anderson, director of policy development at the White House, subsequently sug-gested that 5 percent increases each year might be adequate. which was the figure used by President Jimmy Carter. Mr. Anderson, a defender of the volunteer Army, reportedly feels that the Pentagon is trying to sabotage the volunteer force and bring back the draft by exaggerating costs. According to some sources. White House coun-selor Edwin Meese 3d and chief of staff James A. Baker 3d also are concerned about defense spending.

By Raymond Bonner
New York Times Service
SAN SALVADOR — A group of conservative Salvadoran busi-ness leaders, encouraged by what they say are clear signs of support from the Reagan administration, have intensified a long-running campaign to change the makeup of the government of President José Napoleon Duarte.

The businessmen, who include corporate executives, hotel and re-sort owners and the president of El Salvador's Chamber of Commerce, said the clearest signal for their effort had come in a speech in Washington last week by the assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, Thomas O. The United States is no longer giving unconditional support to Duarte," Juan Vicente Maldanado, a resort developer, said Satur-day. Mr. Maldanado is a leader in the Productive Alliance, which be described as an umbrella group of executives, professionals, and middle- and large-scale entrepreneurs.

Mr. Duarte, in an interview ear-lier this month, said the biggest threat to his government came not from revolutionary forces on the left but from rightist businessmen who "want to take away all the economic reforms" for their own financial gain. He was sharply criticized by the Productive Alliance and several other business groups after the interview was reprinted recently in a local oewspaper.

'Critical Point'

Ambassador Leif Mevik of Norway said he viewed the new con-llict as putting the conference "at a critical point, not the lowest point exactly, but a critical point." The new East-West confrontation swept aside optimism last week on both sides that the meeting could reach final agreement and end by European delegations as being "on a hook, because they want success here rather than failure, and because it would be a setback to their peace offensive. We are not going to let them off the honk."

The disagreement came over security surveillance measures. The Russians said they would accept verifiable surveillance of security in Europe to the Soviet Ural Mountains in return for equal distance of sea and air space for non-European members of the security conference, meaning the United States and Canada

Mr. Kampelman said this could mean surveillance across the At-lantic as far as Philadelphia. He added: "Depending on how you read the Soviet proposal, it could extend to Kansas."

U.S. Trade Envoy Brock To Negotiate Grain Sale

By John M. Goshko and Ward Sinclair

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The White House, moving to end a snarl of bureaucratic infighting, has chose o trade representative William E. Brock to head U.S. oegotiations oo renewal of an agreement to sell millions of tons of grain to the So-

A rivalry between Mr. Brock, Agriculture Secretary John R. Block and Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. over delegation leadership had delayed by several weeks Mr. Block's push to begin talks with the Russians late this

The latest twist in a months-old policy disagreement occurred two weeks ago when Mr. Block told reporters that a list of proposed meeting dates had been dispatched to the Russians. What he apparently did not know was that his message had not been sent. Ad-ministration sources said it was pigeonholed by the State Department, which wanted to control the

But Mr. Block, in a television interview Sunday, disclosed that the administration had settled on Mr. Brock as chief negotiator. He said he continues to bope that talks can begin this month at a neutral site suitable to both sides.

The current five-year agreement allowing the Soviet Union access to U.S. grain will expire Sept. 1. Its extension was complicated by former President Jimmy Carter's partial emhargo on grain shipments in January, 1980, after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

The next move is up to Moscow. Mr. Block said Sunday that be believes that the Soviet Union wants to renegotiate its assured access to U.S. grain. U.S. and Soviet representatives met in London last month to discuss possible sales under the current agreement.

Despite his criticism of the embargo as a candidate, President Reagan did oot end the sales ban until April, after several mooths of jockeying between Mr. Block, who wanted it lifted immediately, and Mr. Haig, who favored a harder up as Mr. Block's proposal to the Soviet Union was wnylaid, Administration sources said there was a consensus at the State Department that the United States was not yet fully prepared to go to the bargaining table and wanted to sound out attitudes among principal U.S. al-ties at the Ottawa economic summit this week.

Further Delays Feared

Mr. Block, under pressure from farmers impatient to sell their burgeoning grain crop, has insisted for weeks that the United States should move quickly to meet with the Russians, who, facing increas-ing problems with their 1981 harvest, have made large grain pur-chases on the world market during the past month.

Farm state legislators and farmer groups have feared that further delays in meeting with the So-viet negotiators could leave the Americans in a position of offering grain that the Russians may not need in the near term and raise new doubts about U.S. reliability as a supply source.

However, the administration also has made a tough line toward the Soviet Union the centerpiece of its foreign policy, emphasizing a link between improved relations and access to U.S. markets with Soviet adherence to what Mr. Haig has called "an internationally accepted code of conduct." Mr. Block has opposed such linkage with farm exports and, in an interview last week, reiterated his view that any U.S. attempt to connect Soviet behavior to the grain negotiations "would be a disastrous consideration."

day, Treasury Secretary Regan said of interest rates; "I think we can give reasonable assurance that by the end of the year our rates will be lower than they are now." He said he did not want to be pinned down oo an exact figure, but predicted that the rates would "several points" lower. The high rates have been attracting money from investors in West-era Europe seeking a higher re-turn, draining investment capital from those countries, and this in turn has led to higher interest rates in the industrial democracies, aggravating an economic slump.

Both the economy and the East-West trade issue were raised directly with Mr. Reagan in consecunve face-to-face sessions with Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Mitterrand Sunday afternoon. The two European leaders expressed concern about the impact of high interest rates, and Mr. Mitterrand said he hoped they would moderate by the end of

Cabinet Backs Alien Plan That Rejects Identity Card

The Cabinet reached agreement numbers in the guest worker pro-on the final and most contentious gram, but no major changes are excomponents of the plan Thursday, pected, a White House official Justice Department and White House officials said. A White House staff proposal rejecting use of an identity card won acceptance, as did the expansion of an amnesty provision to cover up to 5 million current illegals. Mr. Reagan is expected to approve and announce the package after his return from Ottawa later this week. The decision has been delayed because some White House offirials, particularly the domestic policy advisor, Martin Anderson, finally got the Cabinet to modify the sanctions and amnesty recommendations of a Cabinet task force headed by Attorney General William French Smith, sources said, Agricultural interests from the Western states that form strong Reagan political support have opposed sanctions against employers who hire illegals. Rejection of the task force's recommendation for an identity card is seen by several officials as a significant weakening of the sanctions provision, because it will make it more difficult to verify the legal status of a new hire.

The Westerners have pushed for a large Mexican guest worker pro-gram, and the increased numbers of illegals eligible for amnesty will be viewed with enthusiasm by Western politicians, one official said, because it is "simply a guest workers program by another

Uncertainties Mark U.S. Tax Index Plan Past Efforts to Adjust for Inflation Brought Unexpected Results

By John M. Berry Washington Part Service WASHINGTON — The U.S. civilian and military retirement,

Secate has taken a step into the political and economic unknown by voting to index, or adjust for inflation, personal income taxes beginning in 1985. More than half the members of the House of Representatives are sponsor-ing similar bills.

Past efforts at indexing, mostty on the expenditure rather than the receipt side of federal ledgers, have hardly turned out as Congress thought they would

when it enthusiastically adopted them. Social Security, civilian and military retirement, supple-mental security income and food stamps all have been indexed in the last decade or so.

No oae foresaw any problems when Social Security was in-dexed in 1972. Liberals voted for it to be sure the real value of benefits would not be eroded by inflation. Conservatives voted for it partly in hopes that bene-fits would not continue to rise faster than inflation as they did regularly during the 1960s and early 1970s.

Today, Coagress and the Reagan administration are struggling to find a way out of a Social Security dilemma in which indexed benefits have been rising much more swiftly than the wages on which the payroll tax supporting them is paid. One suggestion is to reduce the scope of indexing. Similar proposals are about to be adopted for other programs, including

The Senate bill passed last Thursday would widen all tax hrackets, increase the zero-bracket amount (formerly the standard deduction), and in-crease the present $1,000 person-al exemption ia 1985 and succeeding years according to the percentage increase in the Consumer Price ladex during the 12 months ending in September of the preceding year.

How well indexing personal income taxes would turn out is anybody's bet, but one thing is certain: it would greatly reduce political flexibility in dealing with hudget questions.

If outlays, whether for the military or for nondefense pro-grams, were increased faster than the inflation rate, offsetting cuts would have to be made elsewhere unless U.S. tax receipts were rising because of economic growth. The alternatives would be either a larger budget delicit or an explicit tax increase.

Many of the backers of indexing personal taxes like the idea for just that reason. As Sen. Robert J. Dole, of Kansas, Republican chairman of the Senate Figance Committee said last week during the indexing de-bate, "With an inflatioa bonus in tax revenues, Coagress need not vote the tax increases appropriate to higher levels of spending ... It is time to ahandon that cushioa and get on with the job of responsible and anti-inflationary fiscal management."

Rudy Penner, an economist with the American Enterprise Institute, added, "With index-

they wish to command a higher proportion of national income, and it will no longer be possible 10 take credit for tax cuts that are not really tax cuts."

Critics respond that, over the years. Congress has effectively indexed the tax system without putting itself into a fiscal straitjacket. Even during the period from 1967 to 1979, when infla-tion was much higher than it had been previously and the upward creep of tax brackers thus more severe, periodic tax cuts kent average rates close to what they would have been with an indexed system, according to a Congressional Budget Office

Downward Adjustment

The general tax cut now pend-ing in Congress is an example, albeit a larger one than usual, of just such a downward adjust-ment in taxes that will uffect rising hurdens due to inflation. Congress also is taking the op-portunity to change the tax law in other ways, as it usually has doae in these bills. The chance to make such shifts would un-doubtedly be reduced by indexing, and whether that is good or bad depends on whether one thinks those other changes have been good or had.

Opponents also say that if rising inflation is a result of an overheated economy, bracket creep can help to restrain economic activity automatically and therefore slow inflation, Indexing would eliminate that socalled automatic stabilizer. Oa ing, the Congress will have to is not the result of a boom, and a raise tax rates explicitly when aumber of economists question aumber of economists question whether this stabilizing function is important.

There is disagreement among indexation backers and opponents, too, over whether the change would make the U.S. economy more or less inflationprone. Those opposing indexing argue it would be just one more

They said the decision as to how and what to index is a key ques-tion now, and there seems to be wide agreement among economisis that using the Consumer Price Index to make the adjustments, as the Senate voted to do, is not the best way to do it.

The Congressional Budget Office said that as an alternative, a price deflator for the gross national product, personal consumption expenditures or national income could be used. ## Shooting of Libyan in U.S. Tied to Former CIA Agent

By Philip Taubman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON, - Investigators looking into the attempted assassinatioa of a Libyan student in Colorado last year say they have found evidence that links the man accused of the attack to a former agent for the CIA. The former agent, Edwin P. Wilson, has been charged with illegally exporting arms to Libya and training terror-

On the basis of the evidence, federal investigators say they now believe Mr. Wilson, who lives in Libya as a fugitive, may be responsible for arranging the attack against the Libyan student, Faisal Zagallai, an outspoken critic of Col. Moamer Qadhafi, the leader of the militant Arab nation. The evidence is said to include entries in the personal telephone book of the suspect in the attack.

Investigators say they have also found evidence, including records of telephone calls, that they say ties the suspect, Eugene A. Tafoya, to a civilian employee at the Naval Weapons Center in China Lake, Calif. Mr. Tafoya, now being held in Fort Collins, Colo., is a 25-year veteran of the Marines and the U.S. Army. He won a Bronze Star portedly wet at the White House

The civilian, Douglas H. Haden, a computer scientist, said in a telephone interview Thursday that he had met Mr. Tafova in 1978 while dating his balf-sister, But Mr. Haden denied any involvement in or knowledge of the October, 1980, attack on Mr. Zagallai, a Libyan studying at Colorado State Univer-

Civilians Investigated

The Naval Weapons Center conducts highly elassified research in explosives and electronics warfare. Four other civilians once employed there have been under federal investigation for possible criminal activity and links to Li-bya. Two of them were indicted earlier this year on charges stemming from the theft of military conjument from the center.

Federal investigators and prosecutors say they believe these cases are part of a significant and growing national security problem involving the illegal transportatioa of sophisticated U.S. technology to such countries as Libya and the Soviet Union. They also are in-creasingly concerned that Mr. Wilson's work for Lihya may have included widespread criminal activity inside the United States.

Lihyan authorities took responsihility for the attack on Mr. Za-gallai, who was shot twice in the head at close range but survived. U.S. officials believe the attempted assassination was part of a con-certed effort by Col. Qadhafi to eliminate opposents of his regime.

Roger S. Young, a spokesman for the FBI, said Thursday the bureau was pursuing all leads involv-ing Mr. Tafoya. However, senior officers at the weapons ceater said they had not heard of the connection to Mr. Haden until Wednesday. They said they immediately federal investigators.

Mr. Young said that he could not comment on the specific question of whether the FBI was investion. tigating Mr. Haden and his links to Mr. Tafova

Some U.S. prosecutors have complained that the Justice Department's criminal division has failed to organize an interagency group to pursue the ounerous and geographically disparate leads in-volving Mr. Wilson, the attack in Colorado, the theft of military equipment from China Lake and other related cases.

Coordination Limited

Within the last year, these cases, all of which bave Libya as a common denominator, have developed around the nation, but coordination between law enforcement agencies has been, at best, for specific cases only, according to federal investigators.

MONTREAL — At least 600 people — not 66 as officially anaounced — died in rioting in Morocco June 20, a Canadian member of the International Commissioa of Jurists has alleged.

André Tremblay, a Montreal

law professor, was expelled from Morocco last week along with other members of a commission delegation when the lawyers tried to get authorization to represent people charged after riots in Casablanca, which were sparked by rising food prices.

Mr. Tremblay charged on Friday that the Moroccan government "stole" bodies of dead rioters to cover up the extent of the bloodshed. The government [of King Hassan II] is refusing to turn over the bodies to the families of the dead," he said.

Mr. Tremblay said that the majority of those on trial are youths aged 14 to 17. He said that defendants were not being allowed to call witnesses and that judges were al-lowing "flagrant violations of buman rights." The University of Moutreal law professor said that in the aftermath of the rioting, a government troops imprisoned the wounded rather than taking them to hospiing arms to Lihya, is the main in-strument for further investigation of that case, even though many new investigative leads involve possible criminal activity outside its jurisdiction.

The case against Mr. Tafova is eing handled by state authorities in a Colorado court, and the case involving stolen weapons from China Lake is being prosecuted by the U.S. attorney in Fresno, Calif.

The evidence linking Mr. Wilson to Mr. Tafoya includes numerous references to Mr. Wilsoa, as well as the former ClA agent's associ-ates and girlfriend, found in Mr. Tafoya's persoaal telephone book, according to federal law enforcement officials. The book contained Mr. Wilson's telephone number in Libya, as well as those of some of Mr. Wilson's associates there.

Officials said that there were ilso records of telephone calls that Mr. Tafoya had made to Mr. Wilson or someone at his residence and business phooes.

The indictment returned against Mr. Wilson and Mr. Terpil in April, 1980, charged them with conspiring to murder Umar Abdullah Muhayshi, a Lihyan critic Col. Qadhafi who lives in Egypt. According to the indict-meat, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Terpil offered an individual $1 million to carry out the assassination. The plan was never carried out.

Last week in Fort Collins, prosecutors in the Tafova case attempted to introduce this evidence in court at a bail bond hearing coacerning Mr. Taloya. Judge Robert Miller, bowever, upheld a defense objection to the evidence, and issued an order banning public discussion of the case by lawyers and investigators.
The evidence linking Mr. Tafova

Mr. Haden also was found in Mr. Taloya's telephoae book, investigators said. Telephone company records disclosed several calls from Mr. Tafoya to Mr. Haden's residence ocar the weapons center.

Jordan of Urban League Challenges Reagan Policy

WASHINGTON — Urhaa League President Vernoa E. Jordan Jr. has challenged the Reagan administration to explain what will happen to poor people during the period after social programs are cul next fall and before the promised upswing in the economy

Congress Extraordinary

The extraordinary congress of the Polish Communist Party held over the last few days has gone about its affairs in such a businesslike way that it is easy to forget the historic nature of the occasion. It is a landmark in the Soviet bloc that there was a real choice of candidates for delegates, a choice for Central Committee membership and a genuine competition for party leadership.

It is perhaps equally remarkable that the choices made have produced a Central Committee and Politburo with the balance of power very close to the center. Both bodies contain conservatives and reformers, so Stanislaw Kania, the politically adept pragmatist who has been returned as first secretary, should be able to steer a moderate course.

But political moderation is not a guarantee of success. While the Soviet Union has grudgingly acquiesced in the revolutionary events of the past year in Poland, it has by no means given its blessing. Moscow will continue to seek ways to undo what has been done and to limit what is still to come. There is no guarantee that a more radical party congress would not have produced some sort of Soviet intervention. And there is certainly no guarantee that a national transportation atrike, for example, would not be treated by the Soviet Union as an intolerable threat to Warsaw Pact security, and lead to an invasion. Mr. Kania directed a stern political warning at the Solidarity union, which launched the revolution at the Lenin Shipyards last August. He said the union was abusing its right to strike and over-reaching its mandate by calling for direct worker control over important enterprises such as the state airline, LOT. Solidarity has demanded the right to install its choice as managing director of the airline. The government has refused on the ground that the airline is part of the national defense network. That dispute, at the intersection of politics, economics and security, is of precisely the kind that could galvanize the Russians into action.

The Soviet Union, though, is not the main threat facing the Polish leadership. The real challenge to Mr. Kania, besides keeping the political forces in balance, is the crippled Polish economy. Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski laid the details of the disaster before the congress. He said that prices for food, coal, natural gas and housing would have to be raised by 110 percent to bring supply into line with demand. He added that wage increases had averaged 25 percent in the last six months and the supply of domestic goods had decreased by 10 percent. He said production was continuing to fall, meat supplies would continue to dwindle, the foreign debt would increase by an additional $3 billion this year to about $30 billion and any new strikes would further disrupt the economy.

It is easy to forget that meat shortages sparked the Polish events. As a result there is more freedom in Poland today than there was a year ago. The change is truly astonishing. But there is also less food. At some point that is bound to catch up with Mr. Kania. Unless he is able to work effectively with Solidarity and neutralize his hard-line opponents, he will not be able to simultaneously please Poles whose hunger for bread at some point could outstrip their hunger for more liberty; the Soviet Union, which atill must have a breaking point, and the international bankers who are underwriting Poland's debt. For the moment, though, he has shown himself worthy of respect by all three of these constituencies.

Nuclear Supply Lines

The administratioo's policy statement on nuclear nonproliferation issued this past week amounts to a set of broad guidelines. Depending on how they are interpreted, their effect could range from a tough effort to curb further proliferation to tacit encouragement of trade in weapons-related technologies. We hope it is the former, but elements of the statement suggest it might go the other way.

Take the call to "re-establish" the United States as a "reliable partner" in nnclear trade. This country has always been a reliable nuclear supplier except when it has delayed or withheld supplies because of weapons-related developments, and it has not begun to make those exceptions - under Jimmy Carter or anyone else - with anything like the determination or consistency it should have brought to bear. In the insiders' jargon of this business, in fact, "reliable supplier" suggests not letting nonproliferation concerns interrupt nuclear trade. The policy statement also promises not to "inhibit" reprocessing and breeder reactor programs in Europe and Japan, thereby taking what is at best a neutral stance toward a destabilizing international trade in plutonium - the optimal weapons fuel.

In an unexpected response, the Senate approved a resolution drafted by Sen. John Glenn calling for sweeping changes in the international nuclear regime. Despite strong opposition from the State Department - if one is looking for consistency, State Department hostility to anti-proliferation efforts over the years is where one will find it - the final Senate vote was 89 to 0. The resolution calls for an "urgent" effort by the nuclear suppliers to tighten the rules of nuclear trade. including a "temporary worldwide moratorium" on the transfer of certain dangerous equipment and technology to sensitive areas including the Middle East and South Asia. Learning from Iraq, it calls for limiting the size of research reactors and eliminating the use of weapons-usable highly enriched uranium fuel in them.

It proposes specific steps to make international safeguards worthy of the name, including adoption by all suppliers of the U.S. requirement for safeguards on all nuclear activities in a recipient country, thereby making all facilities subject to international inspection whether or not the owner admits their presence to the International Atomic Energy Agency. In Iraq, this would have meant that inspectors would have had a claim to access to the reprocessing "hot cells." In Pakistan, there would have been a strong claim to open up the secret enrichment plant. Finally, the resolution calls on the suppliers to agree in advance on specific sanctions for any violation of safeguards.

All the major suppliers except Switzerland and the Soviet Union are present at this week's Ottawa summit. It is, of course, too late for the administration to present initiatives specifically based on the Senate's unequivocal call for strong action, and the other supplier countries are not exactly enthusiastic about discomfiting their nuclear trading relationships for mere reasons of potential nuclear weapons spread. But it is not too late for the president to respond by telling the summit partners that he gives this effort a high priority and expects a similar response from them. Agreement at Ottawa on an early meeting of the nuclear suppliers would be a worthwhile outcome.

Policy on El Salvador

The Reagan administration has wisely chastened the tone and modified the substance of its approach to El Salvador. It has always been true that "only a genuinely plu-ralistic approach" can end the terrible violence, but it was not always clear that American policy would support that approach.

It remains far from clear that such an approach can in fact evolve; the moderates on both sides of El Salvador's civil war do not control the forces that do most of the fighting. But this welcome amendment of administration doctrine at least makes it possible for the United States to collaborate with other democratic forces to promote a political settlement.

In its early days, the Reagan administration insisted on seeing Moscow and Havana as the main sources of El Salvador's troubles. Now Thomas Enders, assistant secretary of state for hemisphere affairs, regains some perspective when he says: "For just as the conflict was Salvadoran in its origins, so its ultimate resolution must he Salvadoran." And by calling on "all parties" to renounce violence, Mr. Enders concedes that repression sponsored by officers in the Americanbacked junta is part of the problem.

What is still missing is evidence that the United States will use its influence to leash the Salvadoran security forces. The massacre of peasants continues. The land reform remains subject to the veto of rightist generals and their "death squads" - bankrolled by wealthy exiles. Talk of elections requires a recognition that not once in half a century have the Salvadoran armed forces honored the results of a free vote.

Just possibly, democrats can still be weaned away from the guerrilla side. To win them over, the integrity of next year's voting might have to be guaranteed by outside monitors, as in the Dominican Republic three years ago. But there can be no fair political contest until the United States demands discipline of the government forces that it supports. If it means what it now says, the administration will not tolerate official suppression and barbarity.

NEW YORK - Theatrical managers are getting into a state of mind over a famine of chorus girls. There has never been, it is said, such a scarcity in New York of the right talent for musical comedies. The reason concerns the general prosperity of the country, offering good wages in other lines, and a change in "chorus girl styles." It was only a few years ago almost any girl with a pretty face and good figure could get a place in a chorus. The public now demand that young womeo shall sing as well as look pretty, and this eliminates 75 percent of the old-timers. Directors of musical comedies are being forced to open branch offices in all large cities to get recruits for Broadway attractions.

Some Bumps Await The Reagan Wagon

By David S. Broder

Washington - so many VV things are going so well for the Republicans these days that it seems almost churlish to suggest that there are a few clouds on the horizon. But there they are - and they may as well be acknowledged. First, though, the good news for Republicans. Ronald Reagan has reached his six-month anniversary in the presidency in remarkably fine political fettle. That is attributable to two interlocking accomplishments.

He and his senior aides have done an extraordinary job of focusing public and congressional attention on their chosen agenda of budget and tax cuts. They have dominated the debate on those issues. Second, they have benefited from the remarkable display of cohesiveness and acumen by the congressional Republicans under Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker and House Minority Leader

Bob Michel The teamwork of the White House and the Republican senators and representatives has been awesome. The public is plainly impressed; each succeeding set of olls measures further progress by the Republican Party toward majority status in the country and a ighly competitive position in the 1982 congressional races.

And yet ... There are at least four reasons to believe that the next few months may see some bumpy passages for the Reagan bandwagon and test the Republican Party in ways it has not been tested so far.

Agenda

First, the tightly controlled agenda is about to expand, both domestically and internationally. The Ottawa economic talks, focusing on the overseas effects of Reagan's unique mixture of high interest rates, budget stringency and tax cuts, is putting on display the tensions within the alliance over his fundamental economic awareness in Washington that the Reagan White House is thinly staffed and perhaps stretched too far for the demands of the cripand. ing agenda. The mumvirate of Ed Meese, Jim . Baker and Mike Deaver gets very high marks, as do budget chief Dave Stockman, congressional liaison Max Frieders-dorf, and public relations conn-selor Dave Gergen.

But there are conspicuous weaknesses in the non-budget domestic issues area and in all of foreign policy — weaknesses that in-siders acknowledge, and whose consequences the public will soon enough come to see. The Max Hugel fiasco at the CIA was a warning sign that other national security disasters are waiting to happen. In that area, Reagan is m a race against time to shore up a sagging policy-making structure.

Lightly

And that raises the third nagachievement in the first six months, there is skepticism in Washington about how deeply and perceptively Resgan is engaged in the work of his own government. Anecdotes abound on his tendency to skate lightly over the surface of many policy discussions. It was stunning to learn that for five days after his senior staff had been briefed on the problem, Reagan was shielded from knowledge that was smeaned from individuals finat a major scandal was about to break on CIA spymaster Rugel. Soon the president will depart on a long vacation, and the ques-tions about who is really minding the store are almost certain to rise

Finally, for all their publicized disarray, the Democrats are showing signs of recalling a lesson from their more successful past. They are saying with some conviction on both the tax bill and Social Security issues that they are the party that looks out for the wage-earn-ers, the widows and the orphans, and that the Republicans are servitors of the affinent.

It is not a subtle or elevating argument, but it has worked in the past. And, as the Mississippi spe-cial election has shown, even in the full flower of Reagan's popularity, offers the potential for unifying a working-class constituency across racial and ideological lines and for producing a Democratic victory now and then. None of this suggests that Reagan and his political revolution are about to run off the tracks. My own guess is that the president will come through this shakeout in rea-sonably good shape. But I would be surprised if it is quite the cake-walk or the trumphal procession these first six months have been.

Safety Catches That Hold Soviet Triggers

There have been enough contra-dictory signals from Moscow in the last 10 mooths to show that a zigzag debate must be raging there. Preparations for an invasion were completed up to, but short of, the order to march. Poles were assured Moscow expected them to handle their own problems. Poles were denounced as revisionists and oow have been told once more to put their own house in order.

The widespread suspicion among Poles and Western diplo-mats is that Leonid Brezhnev, mindful of the risks on all sides, has been consistently maneuvering to find a centrist position.

This does not mean that the Kremlin has been sitting passively watching Poland "de-Sovietize," as one adviser to the Solidarity union described the process. There have been openly political interventions by Moscow and probably some clandestinely provocative ones as well. But as the Polish Communist Party opened its anxiously awaited congress last week, Moscow appeared to be relying on the conflict of forces within the party, along with the possibility of military moves, to impose restraint.

That implies acceptance of profound changes in the very nature of Communist rule in Poland. But then, there are formidable deterrents to the use of tanks that did not exist in Hungary in 1956 or in Czechoslovakia in 1968. They consist of specifically Polish and general East-West circumstances oever before present simultaneous-ly. On one side, there are military considerations. With Afghanistan still a drain, a battle in Poland would engage the Red Army on two fronts. There isn't much doubt that Poles, including at least parts of the Polish Army, would fight a Soviet military takeover. With their intense awareness of history. Poles have been talking lately about the Targowica incident. They mean it as a warning. Targowica was a small town in eastern Poland (part of the Soviet Union after the post-World War II border shift) where a group of Pol-ish noblemen met in 1792. Like that of the Communist hard-liners today, their harsh rule was being challenged. Unable to deal with the opposition, they asked Catherine of Russia to intervene. That led to partition, extinguishing Polish sovereignty for over a century but not before the Targowica conspirators were killed by their enraged compatriots.

Even if Moscow could keep its own citizens from comprehending that it was fighting the very masses in whose name it says it rules, the Kremlin's claim to legitimacy would be hollowed before the rest of the world.

This could have internal implications in the Soviet Union, especially if the fighting dragged on. Nationalism has been mounting in the Ukraine, where there are still many ethnic Poles, and there have been oumerous reports of ferment in the three Baltic states as well. It is illuminating that the Polish party invited only representatives of other Soviet-allied countries to the current congress, not of all other Communist parties as is usu-al. There have already been drastic splits among Western Communists on the Polish issue. Presumably, it was considered preferable to avoid displaying these contrasts - which would have given a truer measure of the importance of Poland's struggle to world Communism.

West arms race that might cost the Soviet Union its equal superpower:

The end of detente would be all the greater a setback to Soviet aspirations now that pacifism and neutralism are gaining momentum in Western Europe in opposition to the planned deployment of new American missiles.

Communist suspicions have even been voiced that the Reagan administration secretly hopes the Soviet Union will invade, because that would mobilize and solidify a blunt anti-Moscow stance among Western allies. While there is not the slightest evidence to support these suspicions, their existence constitutes another argument for those in the Soviet leadership who counsel prudence toward Poland. There are also substantial economic drawbacks to Soviet action.

Moscow could, of course, let Poland default on its $27-billion debt to the West, wreck what remains of its-tattered economy, and wait until Poles were starved into submission. But the very aim of re-establishing control would sooner or later require a colossal Soviet subsidy to relaunch Polish production.

Meanwhile, the Soviet credit rating throughout the free world would plummet. Never since the 1917 revolution has Moscow failed to pay its debts promptly. Moscow well knows that it is considered the borrower of last resort for all the Soviet bloc. To permit Polish de-fault would end hopes of Western credits for a long time and condemn Moscow to a new isolation limited to its own resources.

None of this guarantees that

Moscow will continue to tolerate Polish reforms without the use of force. But together these factors represent a huge battery of checks, to be set against ideological losses which the men in the Kremlin may still hope to recoup in part by letting the Poles play out their difficult challenge. $1981, The New York Times.

There were 103 rapes, 2,452 burglaries, 2,285 vehicle thefts and 1,458 stolen cars up to June 21. Law enforcement officials believe that the increases, particularly in murders and assaults, are the result of

Light on Limes, or Why They Don't Usually Grow in Europe

THE MORNING MAIL, often fecund in suprises, recently delivered an interesting report to

"I may possess the only fruitbearing lime tree in captivity in Italy, perhaps in Europe," writes George Armstrong, Rome correspondent for The Guardian, "It is a dwarf lime, said to be of Indian origin, with rather nasty thorns, smallish fruit (by North American standards) and when ripe the skin tends to be more yellowish than limish. However, on my terrace in Rome, with no protection after the first winter, it has consistently produced 15-20 limes a year. . . .

"Why did the lime forsake Europe?" Mr. Armstrong asks. The answer, I think, is simple: The lime did not forsake Europe, for it had never reached Europe.

The word "lime" comes from the Arabic limah. It seems indeed to have been the Arabs who, about A.D. 1,000, or perhaps a little ear-lier, first brought this Southeast Asian fruit to the Near East, where it remains important, and then westward along the African coast of the Mediterranean as far as Morocco, where it is also still important. I have found no evidence that it was known on the European coast of the Mediterranean, even as an import, before the 17th century - which is also when the word "lime" entered the English language. Why not? Probably because the climate of temperate Europe was not propidous in this tropical, and only marginally sub-tropical. Asiatic fruit.

Limes are the tenderest of all citrus fruits. "Temperatures of 28 to 30 degrees," says Normal Tay-lor's Practical Encyclopedia of Gardening, "are sufficient to cause injury to the West Indian lime, temperatures slightly lower injure the Persian lime." The thermometer can drop much lower than that in Rome. Armstrong's lime tree has lasted nine years: I should say that be is lucky.

Protected Position

Perhaps his tree is in a protected position; perhaps it is close enough to a building to benefit from its heat. Since be reports that it came from California and is a dwarf, we may hazard other guesses about its immunity. The lime is the only citrus fruit that is often grown from seed, but in California it is usually budded on rootstock of the rough lemon, Citrus limonia, or the hitter orange, C. aurantium, (The lime itself is C. aurantifolia, C. acida or C. limetta).

Armstrong's tree was probably grown on bitter orange rootstock, which has a dwarfing effect on the resultant plant. As the bitter orange is also considerably more hardy than the lime, it may have contributed some of its toughness to his tree. It is even possible that it is not a pure lime, hut a limequat, a hybrid of the West Indian lime and the kumquat, which the Practical Encyclopedia dismisses sniffily as "not of much practical value"; but the object of this cross is precisely to increase resistance to cold.

Can the lime be "brought back" to Europe? Armstrong asks. Let us eliminate the word "back," and admit that if Armstrong can grow limes in Rome, even precariously, it would seem reasonable to believe that they could be grown in Calabria and Sicily, where every other type of citrus fruit is cultivated, including some known nowhere else. The lime, bowever, is a crotchety fruit that demands other conditions in addition to warm temperatures. For instance, it dislikes wind; it bruises easily, becoming scabby and thus unsal-waves, which cause young fruits to drop from the trees and burn the rinds of ripe limes. This is probably wby we do not hear of limes from Spain, which should have had limes if any European country knew them, since the Moors ruled it for half a millenium and could have planted limes along with the oranges and lemons they introduced to Andalusia: hut Andalusia is subject to the very sort of sudden, intense dry beat that discourages the lime, and so are Sicily and Calabria.

No Incentive

No doubt the skillful citrus growers of Sicily and Calabria could overcome the difficulties of raising limes if there were any incentive to do so, but there is not "I have been waging a small and totally unsuccessful campaign to have the citrus growers in Sicily and southern Italy re-discover [read "discover"] the lime, " Armstrong writes. "This country's agri-cultural leaders, at various levels. turn a deaf ear to the idea, some-times passing it off with a remark, But we don't know what your lime

It is hardly surprising that there is no demand for a fruit whose name is hardly known to the public; indeed, it is unknown to the smaller dictionaries of Continental Europe. "My Italian dictionary," Armstrong writes. "lists limena as being 'a small tree of the Rutaceae family which produces fruit from which essential oils are extracted. [Correct: two essential oils are obtained from limes.] The Italian-English dictionaries seem not to bother with limeta and for them our lime is also the linden. [Correct again; English sows confusion by using the same word for these two very different plants.]
"Lima (plural lime) in Italian is a file, as in nail file or the kind prisoners use 10 saw their bars. The word limena is, I think, almost totally unknown. A certain [American) drink company . . has spending great sums of money in Italy to promote the arrival [of a lime beverage]... The ads in the Italian press say it has il gusto di lime. What are the Italian consumers expected to think that gusto is? The flavor of nail files?"

EEC Sets Anti-Dumping Duty on U.S. Phenol

BRUSSELS — The European Economic Community announced Mon-

BRUSSIELS — I he European reconomic community announced Monday a provisional anti-dumping duty ranging from 8.8 to 19.9 percent on imports of the chemical phenoi from the United States.

The highest duty of 19.9 percent was assessed on U.S. Steel Corp., which cooperated with the EEC study, as well as those companies that did not cooperate with the study. But the EEC excluded Georgia Pacific, because it was not found to be demonstrated in the European market and because it was not found to be dumping on the European market, and Dow Chemical, because it had pledged to raise its prices.

The EEC Commission said the action is needed because imports of U.S. phenol, used to make synthetic resins, fibers, drugs and other chemical control of the control o iral products, rose to 71,600 metric tons in 1980 from 61,100 tons in 1978. At the same time, EEC phenol production dropped more than 120,000 tons to 824,000 tons.

Engine Makers Rev Up Their Bids to Power New Passenger Jet

By Eric Pace
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Will the steek A-320, the htunt-nosed MDF-100, the porpoisesnouted 7-7 all use the new PW2025? Will they also employ the revved-up CFM56-2000? And the redirected RJ500? Or will any of them come to market at alt?

The shorthand that drenches the jet engine manufacturing industry represents a nervously competitive situation frought with potential for profit — and for penu-

The three main makers of engines for the toree main makers of engines for the non-Communist world's commercial jetliners are jockeying in the preliminary phase of the competition to equip perhaps 2,500 new-model, fuel-efficient, 150-pas-sengers jetliners, which are expected to be built in the later 1980s and the 1990s.

"We've got in deliver the better mousetrap," Dennis A. Head said doggedly in a recent speech. As managing direc-tor of operations for Britain's Rolls-Royce the RJ500 enginet, he is with one of the three competitors hoping to put a lock on the power source for the new jets. On the U.S. side are Pratt & Whitney Aircraft (the PW2025) and General Electric (the CFM56-2000).

At two engines a plane and an expected $2.5 million an engine, the engine-maker's sales potential is impressive. But with three engine-makers and three jetline manufacturers poised to compete, Robert J. Carlson, Pratt & Whitney's president said last month, it represents a total aerospace investment of between $4 billion and $6

"Someone is kidding someone," he said.
"That's industry suicide. Our eustomers cannot hope to support, with purchases, aircraft and engine investments like that and the competitions that follow." Not only can the market not support three engine entries, he added, but it is doubtful it could even support two.

All three engine companies competed at one point in the last round of major competition for powering a jetliner — the 178-passenger, two-engine Boeing 757, scheduted to go into airline service in January.

General Electric withdrew, and Pratt & Whitney teads Rolls Royce with 8t orders for the planes specifying the PW2037 engine against 51 orders specifying Rolls Royce's RB-2t1-535 engine. Boeing estimates that there is a market for 1,200 of this type of jetliner through 1990.

In recent months, airlines have been saying they will need a new short-range 150-seater to replace their DC-9s and other aging aircraft.

But strong doubts remain on Wall Street about the whole idea. The jetliner makers are just "throwing paper airplanes at each other," said Wolfgang H. Desmich, aerospace analyst at Morgan Stanley. He suggested that none of the proposed aircraft may reach the market because "the airlines currently have difficulty getting two nickels to rub together."

The three jetliner-makers involved — Boeing, McDonnel Douglas and Airbus Industrie — have also voiced uncertainty about developing and manufacturing their espective (50-seaters.

Boeing has not decided whether it will turn out its own model, the 7-7 with the porpoise nose. Analysts suggest that Boeing is not particularly eager to enter the 150-seater race since it has other planes it wants to sell now, and since, as Mr. Desmich contends, "The aircraft is likely to be obsolescent just about the time it enters service" because of technological advances elsewhere.

However, the three jet engine companies are designing, reviewing their options and consulting with the jetliner manufacturers. They are also talking to the airlines, which, according to aerospace industry practice, decide the engines in the jetliners they buy. By year-end, Wall Streeters predict, each of the three will submit de-tailed proposals for the engines they want to offer.

If Boeing does go forward with its t50scater, the company says it would not begin production before 1987 or 1988, which would allow time for a "new-technology engine, not a derivative engine" to be developed for the aircraft. McDonnell Douglas, has entered into a preliminary agreement with Fokker, the Dutch perospace company, to form a joint venture, which may design and produce its own blunt-nosed 150-seater, known as the MDF-100. Deliveries could begin as early as 1986, but a final decision is not expected for some months. For its part, Airbus has initiated a program to manufacture a sleak model, the A-320, with deliveries to begin early in 1986. that the engine-makers are dragging their (Continued on Page 9. Col. 4)

If Prant & Whitney does go ahead, it plans to present what is informally called the PW2025, a smaller version of its long-awaited PW2037, which should go on the market in 1984. The company bills the PW2025, which it says could be available by 1986, as a new engine, but Mr. Carlson says that General Electric says that it will probably bave its own candidate on the market by 1986. Its CFM56-2000 would be a more powerful variant of its CFM56-2. But GE says many decisions re-main to be made about the engines, and that it may introduce new technology in some of them. Like its predecessor, the CFM56-2000 would be produced by GE jointly with the French state-owned Societé Nationale d'Etude et de Constructioo de Moteurs d'Aviation, or Soecma.

The joint undertaking had been developing the RJ500, but then it was decided to switch to larger engine for the 150-seater market and bring out the RJ500. Rolls Royce says the design work is now being completed, and the is now being completed, and the engine should be ready in 1986.

If there is anything profound to say on the na-ture of celebrityhood as it is totemized in this selection from 16 years of Play-boy interviews, I am not the one to say it. boy interviews, I am not the one to say it. I gave up being profound after acne and Hermann Hesse.

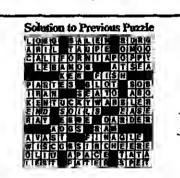

There are writers, like Tennessee Williams and Joseph Heller. There are politicians, like Jimmy Carter, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, Jerry Brown and Fidel Castro. There are entertainers, like Marlon Brando, John Wayne, Miles Davis and Mel Brooks, There is one assassin, James Earl Ray, and one Navi George Lincoln Rockwell, and Nazi, George Lincoln Rockwell, and one war criminal, Albert Speer. Wal-ter Cronkite and Madalyn Murray show up at the prom. Timothy Leary makes a fool of himself. Martin Luther King Jr. and Albert Schweitzer are so dignified that my ears fell off and my feet went to sleep. Muhammad Ali is interviewed twice, like Mel Brooks. Why is Germaine Greer the only celebrity unmentioned on the cover of the book?

Principle of Selection

What is G. Barry Golson, executive editor of Playboy, trying to tell us?
Nothing much, I suspect. His principle of selection seems to have been that he likes these interviews, more than he liked dozens of others. I think this is a terrific principle of selection; it is the way we recommend books to our remaining friends. He is oddly our remaining friends. He is oddly and unnecessarily defensive, letting us know that, say, Walter Cronkite really liked his Playboy interview. The interviews speak for themselves, just like the centerfold. What's more, I believe the interviews in a way that I've never believed the centerfold.

Golson provides the background Golson provides the background for each interview. Some of it is fascinating, Malcolm X and Fidel Castro, for instance, had to be denounced editorially. Timothy Leary needed tougher, "sharper" questions the second time around. This, too, is odd. It certainly didn't happen to Albert Speer. But Playboy, even today, is in the lazy habit of disavowing the very words it prints, as if you can have your patty-cake and then bite it in the neck. Odd as well is the casual confession that as well is the casual confession that Playboy "improves" its interviews by substantial editing, while respectfully declining to allow those who have been interviewed to "improve" their answers. Tough darts.

But enough. The interviews, particularly those by Alex Haley and Robert Scheer, are superb. The "interlides," little snippets from interviews not included in the book, divert and perplex with a liberating randomness. I was charmed, for example, by Gore Vidal, who told Playboy in June. 1969: "Once, sitting next to Jack Kennedy at a horse show, I remarked how easy it would be for someone to shoot him. "Only," I said, "they'd probably miss and hit me." No great loss, he observed cheerfully." I now know more about Gore Vidal than I need to.

We know all these people, of We know all these people. Or course. Their business has been to make themselves known; they are walking sandwich boards. They reveal themselves more intimately, however, in the offhand remark, the dropped stitch. Bertrand Russell was quite certain that his telegrams to Nikita Khrushchev at the time of the Cuban missile crisis managed to finesse World War III. Malcolm X was con-vinced that Beethoven was a black vinced that Beethoven was a black man. George Lincoln Rockwell needed publicity: "The Jew blackout on us is as real as a hand over my mouth." Timothy Leary felt LSD is "Western Yoga." John Wayne explained in Playboy that "High Noon" was the most "un-American movie of all time." Tennessee Williams couldn't finish reading "The Great Gatsby." Walter Cronkite identifies with Horatio Hornblower. This is neat stuff. tio Hornbiower. This is neat stuff.

Three interviews made me leave the room and walk around the block and think. The first was with Albert Speer, who has made a second career of feeling bad about everything he did in his first career, Playboy, to devastating effect, quoted Golo Mann, the son of the famous doubting Thomas: "Speer consecrated himself to self-accusation the had assessed thinself to self-accusation as he had consecrated himself to serving Hitler; such a man does not do things by halves." Such a man is also

Next, there is Nabokov. He wrote down all his answers. One of the questions was "Do you believe in God?"
This is his reply: "To be quite candid—and what I am going to say now is something I never said before, and I hope it provokes a salutary little chill: I know more than I can express in words, and the little I can express any local and have been expressed had I would not have been expressed had I not known more."

Finally, there is Mel Brooks. I resist him. I can't go to one of his movies without feeling as though he were hitting me on the head with a croquet mailet. But he wears you down by bouncing off his own walls. He is asked, "What does an egg cream do for you?" He responds: "Physically, it contributes to your high blood sugar. Psychologically, it is the opposite of circumcision." Later: "Can you give some advice to someone who is trying to quit smoking?" Brooks: "Suck somebody else's nose."

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

FROM the angle of the player and the publicist, organized bridge in North America suffers from a major weakness that few perceive: There are virtually no representative opportuni-ties. A handful of players carn the right to play in world championships, and when they arrive to do so it is often the first occasion on which they have not been playing simply for themselves.

There used to be an annual inter-city match prior to the Summer Na-tionals, but that has disappeared from the scene. The Grand National Team Championship has a geographical fla-vor in the later stages, but instead of representing cities or states the play-ers represent one of the 25 artificial districts into which the American Contract Bridge League is administratively divided.

European players are vastly better off in this respect. An English enthusiast, for example, can play representa-tive bridge in five different ways. He can play for his county in a variety of can play for his county in a variety of head-to-head or multiple team events that are fiercely contested. He can play for Britain in the European Championships, or, if he is young enough, in the European Junior Championships. He can play for England in the annual Common Market Championships or in the Common Market Championships, or in the Camrose series against Wales, Scotland or Northern Ireland.

Representing one's country for the first time can be nerve-racking, and a player making his debut hopes for a few straightforward deals to start the proceedings. The player who held the South cards on the diagramed deal from a recent match between Wales from a recent match between Wales and Scotland was disappointed in this respect. He immediately found himself playing six hearts after an opening lead of the diamond jack. East contributed the queen, an obvious singleton. How should South have planned the play?

The South hand, with seven quick tricks and no slow ones, is not easy to bid on standard methods. Many American experts would bid two clubs, two diamonds and three notump, missing the heart fit altogeth-cines, two diamonds and three no-trump, missing the heart fit altogeth-er. For this reason some experts, nota-bly Alvin Roth, play a two no-trump rebid as forcing, allowing exploration below the game level. In this case North and South were using this plan, and were able to find the fit and bid accurately to six hearts.

After winning the first trick with the diamond ace, the Scottish declarer, Roy Bennett, inferred correctly that all the remaining cards in the suit were on his left. He cashed the heart ace, and judged that West's jack was a South proceeded to cash the ace and king of clubs. He ran the seven of trumps successfully, and ruffed a club to establish dummy's suit. He then cashed the heart king and played the diamond king. If East had obliged by ruffing, South would have been able to claim the slam, making use of dummy's established clubs. However, the Welsh East, David McAndrew, carefully threw a spade. Now the declarer could ruff out the diamond ten, but had to be down one when East overruffed and returned a spade. There was no escape from a spade loser.

If this deal had come later in the match, when South had become used to the notion of representing his country, he might well have found the winning solution. At the third trick he should have led the diamond nine, planning to discard a spade from dummy if West plays low. The defense would have no counter to this plan. Suppose for example that East ruffs and shifts to a spade. South wins and plays clubs, ruffing the third round to establish the suit. He then plays spades, ruffing his loser and leaving everyone but West with two rumps. Club winners are led at East, who is helpless.

PARIS — There were plenty of Frenchmen, Belgians, Dutch-men, Spaniards and Germans, and even the odd Luxembourgeois, Swede, Swiss and Portuguese in the Tour de France bicycle race that ended Sunday. But a main attraction was the Anglo-Saxon group. five riders who put some English on an otherwise unexciting competi-

As the riders ended their 24-day slog on the Champs-Elysees in Paris, Bernard Hinault was more than 14 minutes ahead in overall clapsed time. It was his third victory in four years, and he had been preparing his victo-ry speech for weeks.

Because Hinault's triumph was almost certain from the outset, much interest focused on the five riders whose native tongue was English, Known inevitably as the Foreign Legion, they were Phil Anderson, a 23-year-old Australian; Jonathon Boyer, 25, an American; Graham Jones, 24, and Paul Sherwen, 25, both Englishmen, and Sean Kelly, 25, an Irishman.

Trouble in Mountains

Anderson ranked highest in the group. He finished 10th among the 121 of the 150 who started June 25 in Nice. For nearly two weeks, he was second behind Hinault, then a bad day in the Alps dropped him back.

Jones, who like Anderson rode for the Peugeot team, ranked 20th, Boyer, Hinault's teammate for Renault, ranked 32d and Kelly, riding for Splendor, ranked 48th, Sherwen, who rode speak English - participated in the Tour, the world's most celebrated bicycle road race. What made it different this year was that the English-speaking riders not only did so well as a group, but also showed promise to do better in the future. Two of the widely acknowledged fumre stars of the sport are Greg Lemond, a 21-year-old American, and Stephen Roche, a 20-year-old Irishman. Both were judged by their team directors to be too young now for the long grind, although both were expected to start next year,

In addition, a new group called World Tour Cycling announced plans last week to enter an American team next year in major European races, including the Tour de France.

Boyer was the first American to ride in the Tour. Before his debut last month, he said: "It's not a question of enough firstclass athletes; we have plenty back bome. It's a problem of finding sponsors."

Boyer, who was born in Utah and raised in California, spends a good part of the year at his home near Annecy in eastern France, Despite the star-spangled jersey he wears as unofficial U.S. champion, he is often mistaken for a Frenchman, because his nickname, Jock, causes his name to appear as "Jacques Boyer," as if he were a youngster from Namendy.

He is considered to be something of a novelty on the circuit because he is a vegetarian who carries a supply of California dates and a businessman who spent part of last season trying to sell other riders a brand of sticky tape that aids the grip on the handlebars.

They just kind of look at me as an oddity sometimes," he said. "They wonder why I'm rac-

America is a big and easy place to live, which it is. They wonder why I'm cycling, which is the

Work Now, Play Later

"Before I became a cyclist," he expained, "I worked in a factory. liked my work well enough but had dirty hands, dirty hair, I worked fixed hours, sometimes on Saturdays and Sundays. I'm trying to escape that life. Bicyeling is hard work but in a few years you can guarantee the rest of your life."

The same sort of answer comes from Anderson. "The only way to make money in Australian sports is through golf, rugby, tennis or yachting," he said, "In Europe, even if I don't make my fortune, I think I can earn enough to live well and make a name in Australia. Such thinking is readily understood in a sport that has long been regarded by Europeans as a way of escaping from the family Maurice de Muer, the team director for Anderson, Roche and Jones, said: "They develop a sense of responsibility when they leave their countries to seek their fortunes here. The only choices they have then are to do well or go home. So they're happy with everything - the way they live, the equipment, the crowded racing schedule.

SANDWICH, England - Until now Bill Rogers was always one of those clones out there on the golf tour - hlond, slim-hipped and all but invisible.

But now Rogers is a clone no longer. Now Bill Rogers is the British Open champion. And for the rest of his career, for the rest of his fareer, for the rest of his life actually, that title will be part of his name when he's introduced. Now on the tee, the British Open champion ...

'Just Trying to Finish'

All of a sudden, Rogers has a new aura about him, a sense of stature that sets him apart from the clones. His name will be engraved on that old silver trophy with the 109 other winners -names such as Nicklaus and Watson. Palmer and Trevino, Hogan and Snead, Jones and Sarazen, Hagen and Vardon, names that are not to be confused with those of

But for an embarrassing moment Sunday on the 18th hole at Royal St. George's, Rogers was all but invisible to a British bobby.

Up on the scoreboard the tournament was his. Next to his name was a "-4" in red, meaning he was four under par for the tournament playing the final hole. In second place was Bernhard Langer of West Germany, who had finished at even par, But as Rogers walked quickly down the 18th (airway toward the green with its sloping grandstands on three sides, the gallery hurried for position across the fairway. In the confusion, Rogers had to elbow his way through that chaos. "That's when a cop put his hand on my ehest," he said later. "I told him, 'I'm just trying to finish, pal. Let me finish and we can talk.'

Almost Never Started

Rosers soon emerged from the chaos and finished with a par 4 for a 71 and 276, four under par and the only one to finish under par over the tournament's 72 holes, "My apologies," he said later, "to the policeman I hit trying to get through." Rogers was just trying to finish, but, strangely, he almost never started. As recently as a few weeks ago, he was wondering if it was worth it to play in the British Open this year. He had enjoyed his first British Open at Muirfield in Scot-land last year, but with the tournament returning to Royal St. George's on the English Channel for the first time since 1949, several American pros tried to talk Rogers out of coming over.

They had several reasons - too expensive, too strange a course, too difficult a tournament to win.

"But some people kept telling me f could win here, especially Hughes Norton," he said, referring to his business representative with the International Management Group, which markets him. "After I finished in a tie for second at the U.S. Open last month, I started to think that maybe I could win,

Questions concerning methods to change the format brought forth a multitude of answers from tour-nament players, but nearly every-one agreed with Wade, who said: "It would be a shame to change what has come to be a great tradition just because we have not been doing well lately. When the matches are played in England, the fans are really behind us and we seem to play a lot better."

But the easy U.S. triumph has left the tennis world grasping for ways 10 improve the tournament

American Apathy

Her remark sparked a flurry of responses from the U.S. players, including Lloyd, who said: Something must be done to liven up the American spirit when it comes to playing the Wightman Cup. It was not until Sunday that I personally felt that the American fans were really behind us and this is the way it always seems to be, especially when we are playing the underdog." Larry King, a tennis promoter and busband of Billie Jean King, said: "It would be a terrible mistake to eliminate the Wightman Cup competition just because America is dominating the series."

To Catch an Inkwell

By Hugh A. Mulligan
The Associated Press

HALIBUT COVE, Alaska — Alaskan artist Diana Tillion, whose work is warm, exciting and different, has en unusual art supply prahlem.

When she reaches to grab some ink, it's liable to reach out and grah her. And the source of supply has a 4-to-1 advantage in reach.

Tillion works with octopus ink. From her geodesic-dome studio overlooking Kachemak Bay, per-haps the most beautiful in all Alaska, she wanders along the shore to catch her own octopuses.

"It has to he a minus tide. You find them in their dens under rocks. The telltale signs are very visible. Then you just put your hand under the rock . . .

She described the process in the matter-of-fact tone of someone telling about a bargain in gouache or camel's hair hrushes at a local art store. One octopus Tillion groped far under a rock recently weighed 47 pounds and measured 12 feet from the tip of one writhing tentacle to its apposite. Then the trick was to find the gland near the liver that contains the ink. After all this, she ended up with five cubic centimeters of ink.

Rich Range

The ink is very strong, however, and when it is diluted it provides a rich range of warm, wonderfully indelible tints, enough for a num-ber of fair-sized watercolors. It also can be used to make batik cioth, which Tillion does, along with working in oils, gouache and lithographs and sculpting in clay,

The receptacle the ink comes in is immediately recyclable, since the artist admits, with a proud grin, to being the best sautéed-octopus chef north of the south 48.

The octopus-ink works on display and on the drawing board in Tillion's studio vividly reflect the artist's love affair with Alaska and its people, particularly the natives. Eskimo hunters. A sourdough fisherman. An Indian village in winter. A rookery of puffins. A loon in the rain.

Tillion happened on octopus ink while studying the European masters in Paris, especially some of the late-14th-century Italians whn worked in sepia, the light brown pigment obtained from the ink of the cuttlefish. After experimenting with octopus ink, which is even darker and has a richer range of tone, she was certain that some early monochrome watercolonists and later Japanese artists had also dipped a hrush into this eightarmed inkwell that swims backwards, is said to be as intelligent as a dnlphin and chomps raw lobsters, shell and all. Tillion, a native Californian, arrived in Alaska in 1939 aboard a 90-foot sailboat. There is nn road to Halibut Cove. You either fly in with a bush pilot or hop a fishing boat. To reach the Tillion studin. you step over a pet seal named Scrape, who is sprawled nn the dock. He may applaud your coming with his flippers or reject you by plopping into the water with a haughty splash. Scrape "got his name because no nne thought he would scrape through," said Clem Tillion, the artist's husband and a former state senator. "We got him as o baby and fed him through a tuhe. His mother was killed by a killer whale."

Clem reached Halihut Cove from Anchorage, discovering it quite by accident. Now 17 Tillions. cousins, nepbews, grandchildren, live around the cove, and Clem will offer "free land to any couple with four children who will settle here so we can get a school started for the new generation of kids that's coming along."

He adds one cautionary note, however, "If you can't catch fish, you'll never survive here." He catches more than most anybody

He also has a marine supply business, runs two pilot boats, mines his own coal and operates his own sawmill and electric power plant. He and Diana are building a new house to replace one that burned down last October. "The workmen, the builders: the contractors — everyone has been won-derfully kind," he said, leading the way out to the big picture-window porch overlooking the spruce-lined cove, "That's the way people are in Alaska. When not tending her large vegetable garden, her chickens and her now almost grown up family, Diana Tillion gets plenty of time to paint and scrounge under rocks for octopuses. She only goes shopping once a year. If she forgets the paprika or the Tabasco sauce, forget it until next year.

Art Buchwald is on vacation.

Berlin's Christiane F., Film Child of Heroin

By Michael Zwerin

DARIS - Sex, drugs and violence will do it every time. Since its first screening in April, the film "Christiane F.," about a 13-year-old Berlin junkie who supports her hahit hy prostitution, has drawn 3 million customers in West Germany.

Yet it all looks so unappetizing. People are vomiting, hleeding, they have ugly sores everywhere. They seem to spend half their lives in toilets. Most of their veins are collapsed. "Christiane F." should be mandatory viewing in every high school with a potential drug problem.

Its director, Ulrich Edel, is unhappy with the French title -it opens in Paris on Friday — which adds "13 ans, droguee, prostituée" after the girl's name.

"It makes it seem exploitive." he said, throwing an I've-got-a-Int-to-learn glance at his public relations woman. Although be has made some televisinn films, this is the first feature film hy

Edel, whn is 34.
"I wanted above all to demystify heroin. The way you see Christiane's health deterinrate, for example. People tell me I've exaggerated, that the heroin scene in Berlin is not really as bad as that. I say, 'No. It's worse. It's actually harder, larger, more violent than I showed."

The film, which has not yet been released in the United States, is based on a best-selling West German book written by the real Christiane. The book was subtitled "Children of the Zoo Station," the stop where she and ber young friends congregated. Christiane moves from her first Valium and occasional marijuana to shooting heroin between her fingers amid the spooky mndernity of West Berlin. Gleaming yellow double-decker buses glide silently by rows of teen-age boys selling their bodies so they can buy their next fix. Fur-coated ladies and businessmen in three-piece suits walk through the underground station between clusters of funky junkies nodding on filthy floors, choosing not to see a thing.

Stoned kids cavort on the roof nf a glass-walled tower next to the revolving Mercedes star that dominates the city like a cross nn a cathedral. The large "H" on the door of the men's room that serves as n shooting gallery inside the high-fidelity, stobe-lighted discotheque nn longer stands for "Herren." Christiane and her friends double up with withdrawal pains between sleek, shiny skyscrapers. Part of the problem seems to be that modern cities are so alienating and impersonal that these teen-agers prefer to pass their time underground as high as possible, attempting to escape from society before they have even entered it.

'Less Hope'

"I was one of those people who tried soft drugs in the '60s," Edel said. "At that time we got high to help us deal with exterior life. We wanted to appreciate reality better. There seemed to be a future in the '60s. But after Willy Brandt left office and with the rising unemployment, there was less and less hope. Now young people want to escape. Heroin is good for escaping. You dnn't see nr feel anything."

In the 1940s and '50s, heroin

was used mainly by American hlacks trying to escape the mis-ery of the ghetto. It did not get much press attention until, along with their music, jazz musicians hrought what they called "junk" across the racial harrier. The Vietnam War accelerated the process: Now it was called 'skag" or "smack." Much of the German junkie vocabulary is taken from black slang — fix, shoot, cold turkey, clean.

The 'The White Duke'

As Christiane's story shows, a Int of this drug use had to do with peer pressure as much as escape. It was n way to feel hip, in the know, one of the boys. Now heroin is rare in jazz circles, prohably because there's more hope in the metier.

Christiane's hero is the rock star David Bowie, whose music is featured in the film and who once had a heroin problem. There is a scene where she looks up to him onstage (like young-sters once looked up to Charlie Parker) as he sings:

The return of the thin white duke throwing darts in lover's eyes The return of the thin white duke making sure and stays . . .

It is clear that she does not understand the words. All she knows is that her mother abviously doesn't care much about her and that all her friends are on junk and she absolutely has to feel part of something, and may-be she hasn't tried the "thin white duke" yet only because she's a scaredy-car. She decides to take one snort, just to under-stand what everybody else sees in

"In Germany there is now a campaign to legalize hashish. I believe in it [legalization] only half and half. What happens if yoo can buy it everywhere? It might be terrible, because the condition of society at this was in and out of police stations regularly. "It was not interesting for me in show that," Edel said. This is not a film about the drug scene in Berlin, it is the story of nne girl. You'll also notice there's no dealer in the film. Junkies buy heroin from other junkies who deal to support their habits. It's a cliché to say the dealer is the bad guy and the junkie a victim."

When Christiane and her boyfriend decided to kick, there were apparently no effective rehabili-tation programs to help them. "The real Christiane went into a therapy center five or six times," Edel said. "I did not show that because it would bave been boring, and anyway at the time — 1975 and 1976 — therapy centers were really bad. Christiane told me she once went to a place run by Scientologists who tried to eject heroin and inject Jesus in its place. Now it's better, now there are places where ex-addicts work with the junkies."

The youths in the film, none of them professional actors, all look convincingly stoned. How did Edel manage that? He langhed: "Go ask Natja [Brunckhorst, who plays Christiane, and who was in another corner of the hotel lohby giving another interview. She'll show you right away. They loved playing that, all the kids. I explained to them what the reactions were. The facial muscles sort of go to sleep, the corners of the mouth turn down into a proud expression. The eyelids become very heavy and it's a real effort to keep them up. You move in slow motion. They played that with great pleasure, they laughed a lot.

"I went all over Berlin looking for actors. I visited all the schools, the discotheques. I didn't want known actors, so that the characters would seem more real, and I certainly didn't want to work with real addiets. That would have been impossible."

Where is Christiane now? "She finished high school, she works in a bookshop in Hamburg. She's 19. She's really clean, since three years. I hope — I really think she's made it. But she's an exception, you know. She started younger than average and she al-ways wanted to stop. Most people who have been junkies for two or three years told me that they never wanted to stop. They say, I will die as a junkie."

Is there any hope of a cure?

"I only see a solution by changing society. The recent riots in England come from the same cause. Perhaps it's better there. They fight. Perhaps it's better to turn this frustration outside, to destroy other things rather than yourself." Edel stopped for a moment and then shook his bead: "I'm not so sure."

Gene Autry, 73, the former Western movie idol who went on to build a financial empire, has married a 39-year-old former bank vice president, Jacqueline Ellam, in Burbank, Calif. It was the second marriage for Autry, who was married for 48 years to the former ine Mae Spivey, who died in May, 1980. Ellam was vice president of Security Pacific National Bank in Cathedral City, Calif. Autry holds usjority interests in Golden West Broadcasting Co. and the Califor-nia Angels baseball club.
